OVERVIEW

USAID WORKS TO ELEVATE DEVELOPMENT AND SEIZE PIVOTAL OPPORTUNITIES THROUGH EXPANDED PARTNERSHIPS WITH NONGOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS

INTRODUCTION

USAID Forward—the initiative to transform the United States Agency for International Development into a modern development enterprise—has entered its third year, and the Agency has made great strides in the effort to strengthen the Agency by embracing new partnerships, investing in the catalytic role of innovation and demanding a relentless focus on results. Taken together, the reforms have formed the foundation of a new model for development.

In his March 2013 annual letter, USAID Administrator Dr. Rajiv Shah reflected on President Obama's State of the Union call to join with the world in ending extreme poverty. Dr. Shah called it "an extraordinary moment," and pointed to the remarkable strides that have been made toward this goal in the last 20 years as well as the work that remains. "We cannot address the challenges alone, but we can mobilize movements," he said. "By working together…we can realize a world where every farmer has seeds, every child gets healthy food, basic medications, and a good education, and everyone has a say in their future." Later in his letter, Dr. Shah said that a new model is beginning to emerge that defines the way we work around the world. "We're moving from a traditional model of top-down development to a new model that engages talent and innovation everywhere to achieve extraordinary goals."

USAID Forward seeks to transform the way the Agency is working to meet the goals of ending extreme poverty, improving lives, and fostering prosperous, democratic nations. And the Grand Challenges for Development exemplify the ongoing effort to identify and support emerging technologies as well as traditional tools that can be reimagined and applied in new and innovative ways. The past year saw two new Grand Challenges for Development announced, both of which dovetail with the goals to end extreme poverty and seek out development ideas from all stakeholders.

First, the Grand Challenge for Development for Powering Agriculture seeks solutions that can provide smallholder farmers with clean energy solutions for irrigation, crop processing, cold storage, or other processes that boost production or increase the value of outputs. A second Grand Challenge for Development announced this year seeks to increase citizen engagement with government by supporting innovative solutions that use web and mobile technology to grow the global movement for open government, transparency, and accountability. Making All Voices Count seeks to bolster efforts to elevate government performance, help new democracies provide to their citizens, and promote inclusive development.

Grand Challenges for Development draw on the resources of multiple donors—governments, international institutions, corporate entities, and philanthropic organizations—and capabilities of the various stakeholders—nongovernmental organizations (NGOs), business associations, entrepreneurs, and anyone with a good idea for making development work. Private voluntary organizations (PVOs) have an important role to play in the effort to conceive new approaches to development, and USAID recognizes them as an integral component of the emerging paradigm that envisions, tests, and deploys the new ideas and technologies that are expanding the boundaries of what's possible.

To facilitate its humanitarian and development work, USAID registers PVOs so that they are eligible to compete for funding opportunities with the Agency, and the Local Sustainability Division in the Office of Innovation and Development Alliances (IDEA) is the Agency lead for the Registry of U.S. and international PVOs.

The purpose of PVO registration is to—

- Identify PVOs that engage in, or intend to engage in, voluntary foreign aid operations
- Determine whether PVOs meet certain general operating guidelines and accountability standards
- Certify that PVOs are eligible to apply for USAID assistance

USAID is continuing its efforts to expand partnerships with PVOs to support their direct activities as well as their work with local partners. In conjunction with its core registration role, IDEA's Local Sustainability Division is developing new outreach tools to facilitate connections between PVOs and the Agency, including web-based training materials for newly registered organizations, outreach events, and an e-newsletter to highlight partnership and funding opportunities. Overall, the Division's outreach efforts seek to enhance development outcomes by making the Agency more accessible and responsive.

2013 VolAg Report

The Report of Voluntary Agencies Engaged in Overseas Relief and Development (VolAg Report) provides a snapshot of the work of the U.S. and international PVOs that are registered with USAID. As defined by USAID, a PVO is a tax-exempt, nonprofit organization that solicits and receives cash contributions from the general public and conducts, or anticipates conducting, international program activities that are consistent with U.S. Foreign Policy objectives (see 22 CFR 203.2 for complete definition). PVOs register with USAID to establish and maintain eligibility to compete for grants and cooperative agreements. Information about registration can be found at www.usaid.gov/pvo/

The 2013 VolAg Report includes a brief description and a summary of financial activities for the 595 U.S. PVOs, 112 international PVOs, and 6 U.S. Cooperative Development Organizations (CDOs) registered with USAID as of September 1, 2013. The information contained in this report is also available through the online PVO Registry, a searchable database that is updated daily, at pvo.usaid.gov/usaid/

Partnership Development

Partnerships are a central component of USAID's vision of a modern development enterprise and the Agency's ongoing major initiatives to increase effectiveness in meeting development objectives. Working closely with local implementing partners and building their capacity is a key aspect of the Agency's Local Solutions effort (formerly Implementation and Procurement Reform). The Local Sustainability Division is at the cutting edge of these efforts. The Division implements several programs that complement Local Solutions and works with and builds the capacity of local partners to strengthen local development outcomes.

IDEA's Local Sustainability Division leads the Agency's partnership building with PVOs, NGOs, and cooperatives. In this role, the Division—

- serves as an institutional bridge between the Agency and the PVO, NGO, and cooperative communities;
- provides support and services to Agency staff and partners that are developing strategic partnerships involving NGOs, PVOs, or cooperatives;
- informs Agency efforts to develop innovative, effective programs that strengthen PVOs, NGOs, and cooperatives in USAID partner countries; and U.S. PVOs received $21.1 billion in support from U.S. citizens and private sources, over 6 times the $3.1 billion from USAID.

- provides leadership on the Agency's outreach to the PVO, NGO, and cooperative communities as well as on policy formulation and issues of concern to these communities.

In addition to PVO Registration, the Division also manages the following programs:

The Development Grants Program (DGP) focuses on building and expanding partnerships with U.S. and local, in-country organizations that have little or no direct experience in working with USAID. The DGP program enables grantees to develop their organizational and technical capabilities while implementing innovative development activities in their home countries. Through the DGP, USAID aims to create stronger, flexible, and sustainable organizations that can rapidly respond to the evolving needs of those they serve. In addition to receiving funding for activities and institutional support, DGP grantees have access to capacity development support to enhance their organizational and/or technical capabilities. This support is nimble and customized to grantees' needs, with a focus on empowering local capacity-building service providers where possible.

The Cooperative Development Program (CDP) builds the intellectual capital of major partner U.S. cooperatives and cooperative development organizations and has led to notable achievements, including new research on cooperative law and regulation, the development of tools to measure cooperative development, and the creation of a Comprehensive Guide for Rural Electric Cooperative Development. The CDP enables partners to address critical challenges to cooperative development, to develop and test solutions and, where successful, to incorporate these solutions in their broader programs, creating substantial impact and a significant multiplier effect.

The Small Project Assistance Program (SPA) is a joint collaboration with the Peace Corps through which volunteers support USAID development efforts, helping to implement small self-help activities to support community-level development projects in sectors ranging from health to agriculture to small-enterprise development. SPA-sponsored projects focus on developing local community groups, including local associations, government entities, schools, and NGOs. Volunteers also work with NGOs to improve services to surrounding communities. Participants learn key development skills that encompass program design, implementation, monitoring and evaluation, integrated planning, and service delivery.

The Limited Excess Property Program (LEPP) enables USAID-registered PVOs to access government excess property for use in their overseas development programs. LEPP partners are able to obtain property, such as hospital beds, vehicles and computers, through access to the U.S. General Services Administration's and the Defense Logistics Agency's Disposition Services' excess property programs.

Leveraging Private Resources for Development

PVOs and local NGOs help USAID support local capacities to address local needs, bringing additional resources to bear and facilitating sustainable development worldwide. By enlisting the PVO community's expertise and program delivery capacities, USAID is better able to direct humanitarian relief and development assistance to areas of need. As the data presented in this report indicate, the privately generated resources that PVOs spend on international development activities far exceed the resources they receive from USAID or the U.S. Government.

During FY 2011, U.S. PVOs registered with USAID received $21.1 billion in support from non-U.S. Government and private sources, over six times the $3.1 billion that USAID channeled to USAID-registered PVOs. Other U.S. Government agencies and international organizations provided an additional $4.3 billion, bringing the total private and public support and revenue for registered U.S. PVOs to $28.5 billion.

USAID also provided more than $236 million to registered international PVOs in 2011, augmenting their $4 billion in direct spending on international relief and development activities. Meanwhile, U.S. CDOs received $331 million from USAID during 2011, as well as $374 million from other sources, to support their efforts to build and strengthen cooperative organizations overseas.

Doing Business with USAID

To implement its worldwide humanitarian and development activities, USAID uses a number of acquisition and assistance instruments, including contracts, grants, cooperative agreements, and purchase orders. USAID negotiates and initiates these instruments to obtain the commodities and technical assistance the Agency requires to achieve its objectives. Organizations seeking to work with USAID will find useful policy and business information at the following websites:

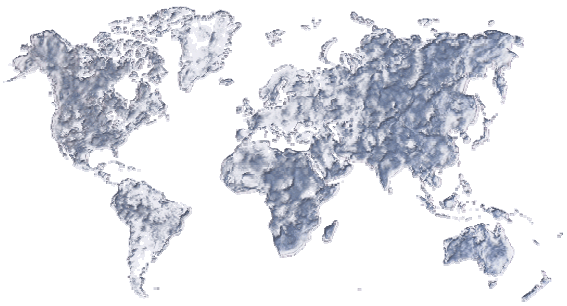
PVO Registration – provides information on USAID's PVO registration process, including links to the Conditions of Registration, a description of the information and documentation required to complete an application for registration, and a link to the registration site.

pvo.usaid.gov/usaid/
Registry of Private Voluntary Organizations – provides detailed information on PVOs currently registered with USAID via a searchable database.

The VolAg Report is the culmination of the annual effort by the Office of Innovation and Development Alliances' Local Sustainability Division staff to collect, validate, and disseminate a clear, factual report that helps inform the Congress, Agency staff, partner organizations, and the general public about the activities of the PVO community. We hope you find it a useful resource.

UNITED STATES

PRIVATE VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS



REGISTRY

The rules governing the registration of nongovernmental, nonprofit agencies engaged in voluntary foreign aid are promulgated in the Code of Federal Regulations, Title 22, Part 203. The U.S. PVO Registry consists of the following agencies.

Descriptions of voluntary foreign aid activities were provided by USAID-registered organizations.

100X Development Foundation

Ms. Terri Hasdorff, VP
7020 Fain Park Drive, Suite 5
Montgomery, AL 36117
TEL: (334) 341-9097
EMAIL: info@100xdevelopment.com

EMAIL: hji@accordiafoundation.org
WEB: www.accordiafoundation.org

Works to overcome the burden of infectious diseases by building health care capacity and strengthening academic medical institutions in Africa. Accordia Global Health Foundation leverages the expertise and contributions of diverse partners and focuses these efforts not only to fight specific epidemics but also to lay the foundation for addressing future infectious disease crises. Through strong collaboration with diverse partners, Accordia consolidates global resources to fight infectious disease; strengthens in-country capabilities in the areas of health training, research, prevention, and care; and creates evidence-based models that are immediately relevant in resource-limited settings. By working within African medical centers, Accordia develops lasting institutional leadership, paves the way for stronger African health systems, and nurtures the next generation of health leaders.

Assists refugees, the economically challenged, and the underserved to become self-sufficient, productive members of their communities. AAA works to promote human rights protection, humanitarian assistance access, health services, and environmental conservation. AAA's Uganda field offices provide humanitarian assistance to communities affected by years of fighting between government and rebel military groups. Children are often the victims of abduction and forced service in rebel military groups. AAA provides play therapy for these children as a way of helping them deal with the traumatic experiences they have endured. Other programs include HIV/AIDS prevention, adult literacy, and programs designed to develop sustainable local economic activity.

Provides financial and human resources for the Unidad Académica Campesina-Carmen Pampa (UAC-CP), a unique college in rural Bolivia that provides higher education to women and men in the areas of nursing, agronomy, education, veterinary science, and ecotourism. Founded in 1999, CPF is a 501(c)(3) organization based in St. Paul, Minnesota. CPF supports the UAC-CP's mission and vision to address and dissipate the root causes of poverty through education, research, production, community service extension, and leadership formation. In 2003, a U.N. subcommittee designated the UAC-CP program one of the seven most effective poverty eradication initiatives worldwide. More recently, UAC-CP was recognized by the Education and Health Committee of the Legislative Assembly of Bolivia as a Meritorious Institution of the State for its work in higher education and sustainable development.

Provides international mission opportunities for doctors, dentists, and other health care professionals. CMDA organizes and leads 50 short-term health care teams around the world each year. The organization uses volunteer doctors to train physicians in other countries and trains and equips career missionaries involved in medical and dental outreach. The organization conducts a 10-day continuing education conference in Kenya or Thailand each year for 300 medical missionaries. CMDA also sends medical teams to developing countries to train local doctors in specialty areas. Other priorities include mission hospital management consultation; management training for mission hospital leaders; a monthly newsletter for encouragement, education, and sharing of best practices; and a pre-field orientation for newly appointed medical missionaries. The organization's most recent outreach effort addresses the health implications of human trafficking.

Improves the quality and availability of health care through partnerships with locally run health facilities and projects, both internationally and in the United States. Programs operate on an ongoing basis and in response to emergency situations. Nonsectarian and apolitical, Direct Relief is privately funded and receives no government funding. Internationally, Direct Relief strengthens access and quality in three areas: maternal and child health, HIV/AIDS, and primary care; domestically, the organization provides medicine to low-income, uninsured patients of community health centers. Direct Relief works to increase the self-sufficiency of more than 500 partner organizations that serve nearly 35 million people in more than 70 countries, providing financial support, pharmaceuticals, supplements, medical supplies, and equipment. Direct Relief's goal is to ensure that appropriate care is available to people in need regardless of political affiliation, ethnic or religious identity, or ability to pay for services.

Empowers health workers with decision-support resources. D-tree International develops clinical algorithms (decision trees) that run on cell phones and makes them available to health workers in low-income countries. Every decision a health worker in a developing country makes can save a life—or shorten it. However, in parts of the world where the doctor-patient ratio is 1 to 50,000, critical health care decisions are often made by providers with limited medical training. With D-tree's innovative mobile technology, health workers have access to step-by-step protocols for accurately diagnosing and treating patients, reducing errors and dramatically improving outcomes. D-tree seeks to improve the lives of patients in developing countries one decision at a time.

Focuses on the physical development of children, families, and communities. FOMI identifies a community's pressing needs and communicates those needs to government agencies, nongovernmental organizations, and churches. FOMI identifies responsible providers and connects these providers with people in need. FOMI develops programs for proper nutrition, basic health care, education, child sponsorship, and community economic development. The organization responded to the 2010 Haitian earthquake by airlifting medical supplies and providing containers of relief goods. With its network of volunteers, FOMI assists three major orphanages in Port-au-Prince, Haiti, as well as a hospital, clinics, and nearly 100 schools throughout the country.

Alleviates hunger in some of the world's poorest communities by providing resources to empower people to feed themselves. FRB does not ship grain or food overseas; instead, the organization offers people dignity by giving them a hand up instead of a handout, thus breaking the cycle of dependency. As a Christian, nongovernmental, humanitarian organization, FRB is committed to providing sustainable food security in the developing world through small-scale agricultural interventions. Programs focus on education and the introduction of no-till alternatives, conservation, improved seeds and livestock, market access, water reclamation, food storage, and other techniques that allow people to feed their families, send their children to school, and improve the quality of life at home and in their communities. The organization's strategic goal is to engage the grassroots U.S. agricultural community in efforts to solve the problem of hunger worldwide.

Reduces water-related illness and death in developing countries by building self-sustaining projects that make safe drinking water accessible to the poor and empowers local churches to bring physical, social, and spiritual healing to their communities. The communities targeted by Healing Waters are often overlooked for aid because they have municipal water systems in place. Unfortunately, many of these systems deliver contaminated water, and commercially bottled water is a luxury the poor cannot afford. Attributes of the organization's water programs include the following: (1) water treatment technology; (2) health and hygiene education; and (3) a basic business model to ensure sustainable water system operations.

Supports the use of socially equitable and environmentally sustainable transportation worldwide. ITDP focuses on working with municipalities and nongovernmental organizations in developing countries to implement projects that demonstrate how transport emissions and accidents can be reduced, or how the basic mobility of the poor can be improved. ITDP's primary programs focus on building bus-rapid-transit systems, promoting bicycling and walking, managing traffic demand, and revitalizing city centers. Projects build local knowledge and skills while generating greater public awareness of viable and sustainable transport solutions. ITDP prioritizes its involvement in projects based on the level of demonstrated local commitment to successful implementation, the availability of financial resources, and the potential benefits of the project, including the degree to which the project will demonstrate solutions to others.

Improves the lives of the rural poor in developing nations through agricultural and economic development. iDE's guiding principle is that the rural poor are natural entrepreneurs who, if given the opportunity, will invest their limited resources to ensure their families' food supply and generate income. iDE empowers rural farmers to pull themselves out of poverty by making available quality inputs, training, affordable technologies, capital, and access to markets. Simple, low-cost water technologies increase income generation by allowing farmers to cultivate high-value, labor-intensive crops. These technologies have enabled families to become more efficient agricultural producers, generally doubling their net annual income in the first year. iDE's efforts have helped some 17 million people escape poverty.

Alleviates human suffering by providing health services and critical assistance to victims of disaster, poverty, and neglect. IRT focuses on four core areas: domestic and international disaster relief, medical training, surgical outreach, and health promotion. Teams of volunteer specialists perform most of the program activities. Medical relief teams augment local health care professionals during natural disasters and other crises, medical training teams train local instructors in emergency medicine and obstetrical and neonatal care, and surgical teams perform surgery in remote, impoverished areas where specialists do not practice. IRT construction teams repair homes damaged by natural disasters. Rather than establish field offices, IRT works with local agencies to build effectiveness and capacity. IRT has provided assistance to 65 countries during its 24-year history.

Advances community development and saves lives through programs that improve rural supplies of drinking water. Lifewater International also empowers villagers via hygiene education and promotes healthy living through improved sanitation. Lifewater partners with indigenous organizations in Africa and Asia to train water and sanitation technicians and health promoters using a Lifewater-developed curriculum. North American field trainers volunteer their time to teach practical skills in shallow-well drilling, hand-pump repair and maintenance, and community health, sanitation, and hygiene practices. Using participatory methods to empower communities so they can identify and solve their own problems, Lifewater encourages cultural contextualization and the training-of-trainers approach.

MIUSA's international leadership and capacity-building training programs empower women and men with disabilities to address issues within their communities and countries, such as equal access to education, employment, and community resources. MIUSA's technical assistance and training for international nongovernmental organizations enable organizations to include people with disabilities in development and humanitarian assistance programs. MIUSA's books and videos, including the manual Building an Inclusive Development Community, are useful resources for the development and disability communities. MIUSA's global disability network includes countries from every region of the world.

Serves people with intellectual disabilities through supports that include day activities, job coaching, and medical and residential services. The individuals Mosaic serves live in their own homes, in homes owned or leased by Mosaic, or on one of the organization's campuses in Axtell or Beatrice, Nebraska. Mosaic-provided services are guided by an individual plan of support for each person. Mosaic also operates two independent living residences for senior citizens. These operations share Mosaic's values and philosophy of providing high-quality services, but operate under the names Evergreen (Osage, Iowa) and The Oaks (Menomonie, Wisconsin). Internationally, Mosaic partners with nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) in the Dominican Republic, India, Kenya, Latvia, Romania, Russia, and Tanzania to provide services for children and youth with intellectual disabilities and their families. New partnerships with NGOs in Bulgaria and Israel are currently under discussion.

Alleviates poverty among women and their families in rural areas of the developing world. OFED International facilitates and expands access to credit to help women acquire farming inputs that bolster production as well as equipment that allows them to initiate additional income-generating activities. The organization fosters the creation of women-only cooperatives and strengthens existing ones by improving coordination, sustainability, and participation in decision-making processes and providing training. OFED International enhances women's managerial and financial skills to ensure sustained and superior output; familiarizes women with water management, irrigation, and marketing intelligence systems to facilitate production and marketing; and develops infrastructure, such as roads, to help producers more easily connect with markets. OFED International also supports health care and community service activities.

Provides a preferential health care option for the poor. By establishing long-term relationships with sister organizations based in settings of poverty, PIH strives to achieve two overarching goals: bring the benefits of modern medical science to those most in need of them and serve as an antidote to despair. PIH draws on the resources of the world's leading medical and academic institutions and on the lived experience of the world's poorest and sickest communities. PIH's mission is both medical and moral; it is based on solidarity rather than charity alone. When the organization's patients are ill and have no access to care, PIH's team of health professionals, scholars, and activists will do whatever it takes to make them well.

Works to end child slavery in Haiti in our lifetimes. "Restavek" is a form of modern-day slavery that affects one in every 15 Haitian children. Restavek children are often given to relatives or strangers to perform menial tasks for no pay. RFF's comprehensive strategy to end this practice includes meeting the long-term needs of restavek children through effective child advocacy, establishing transitional homes for children who suffer the worst forms of abuse, working with churches and pastors (i.e., culturally significant leaders) to change societal attitudes toward restavek, establishing community centers to enhance economic empowerment for children and adults, connecting government agencies with the people through partnerships with churches, and using effective mass media campaigns to provide information on justice issues and family planning. RFF seeks to undermine the social acceptance of, and economic need for, restavek.

Combines indigenous and Western knowledge to confront the enormous health crisis now affecting the 6 million Tibetans in China. The Terma Foundation implements public health programs that address nutrition, education, maternal and child health, sanitation, and primary care, integrating traditional belief systems with low-tech, low-cost Western technology where appropriate. Current emphasis is on multi-drug-resistant tuberculosis in the region. The organization supports education through programs in literacy, vocational training, the arts, and international educational exchanges.

Programs are carried out by a multidisciplinary coalition of Tibetans, Chinese, and Westerners in cooperation with nationals from the People's Republic of China and local health authorities.

Helps people improve their lives. A nonprofit people-to-people movement, TFL began helping people in developing countries plant and care for fruit trees in 1984. The trees protect the environment and provide a low-cost, self-renewing source of nutrition, and TFL's philosophy has spurred a global movement for sharing knowledge, skills, and resources. Today, the organization works with people on projects that strike at the root causes of poverty, malnutrition, and disease. Since its inception, TFL has motivated more than 3 million people in several countries to address needs in their communities, not only by planting trees but also by digging water wells, building fuel-efficient stoves, promoting scientific studies of beneficial plants, and establishing schools and children's libraries.

Equips leaders to mobilize communities to care for their own children with their own resources. VCI promotes community involvement and ownership, recognizing that communities that run programs are more likely to own and sustain them over time. VCI also promotes indigenous leadership and reliance on community resources. These core principles create program standards that are not likely to create dependence on Western aid. The organization serves individuals from a number of faith traditions and seeks to enlist members and leaders of various faiths as volunteers. VCI chapters initiate development programming with the outcomes they want for their orphans and vulnerable children clearly defined. The organization evaluates program success by assessing the quality of outcomes achieved rather than the quantity of services provided.

Gives impoverished women in rural East Africa the tools they need to climb out of poverty. The WMI loan program provides a structured environment where women receive business training, financial literacy mentoring, and support from a village-level community-based organization (CBO) while participating in four consecutive 6-month loan rounds at increasing borrowing limits (from $50 to $250). After 24-months, the women graduate from the CBO program to become commercial bank customers. WMI guarantees the client's first bank loan, and after a year, the client graduates to independent borrowing, financial autonomy, and the formal economy. Funds repaid to the CBO by the transitioning borrowers are recycled to provide new loans to first-time borrowers. Interest on the CBO-issued loans covers all operating expenses of the village loan hubs.

Campaigns internationally on animal welfare issues, working to prevent the inhumane culling of dogs and cats, end the suffering of billions of farm animals, free bears from captivity, stamp out cruel international trade in wild animals, and save small whales and dolphins that are killed or captured around the world. WSPA also provides aid to the tens of millions animal victims of disasters. WSPA has 15 offices worldwide and the world's largest network of animal protection specialists, who have ties to more than 1,000 animal protection societies in 156 countries. WSPA is represented on numerous international bodies and is the only animal welfare organization to have consultative status at the United Nations and the Council of Europe.

Works worldwide to conserve nature for the benefit of species and people. WWF strives to preserve the diversity and abundance of life on Earth as well as the health of ecological systems by protecting natural areas and wildlife populations and working with local communities to promote the sustainable use of natural resources. WWF also works with businesses to "green" their supply chains, reducing their carbon and water footprints and their impacts on biodiversity. As the largest U.S. organization working worldwide to conserve biodiversity, WWF is part of an international network that includes offices and representation in more than 100 countries and more than one million WWF members residing in the United States.

WorldTeach, Inc.

Strives to meet the educational needs of developing countries by partnering with ministries of education and other educational organizations to provide volunteer teachers. WorldTeach volunteers primarily teach English, but a growing number also provide instruction in math, science, entrepreneurship, and information technology. Volunteers teach full time in schools ranging from elementary level to community colleges. Each program has a full-time in-country field director and offers a 4-week in-country orientation. Most programs encompass a full academic year, although the organization also provides a few summer and semester opportunities.

WSOS Community Action Corporation, Inc.

Helps individuals and families acquire the skills and knowledge they need to become self-sufficient and to more fully participate in their communities. WSOS's international exchange programs bring participants from developing countries to the United States for 1- to 6-week learning experiences. These exchanges feature workshops, round-table discussions, site visits, and mentoring and interaction with U.S. counterparts in various fields. WSOS manages the Great Lakes Consortium for International Training and Development, which is an association of organizations working to link capacity and resources with needs around the world.

Youth Advocate Programs, Inc.
YAP

Mr. Jeff Fleischer, CEO

WEB: www.yapinc.org

Offers community-based programming to high-needs young people and their families. YAP was founded in 1975 and currently works in 18 U.S. states, providing child welfare, juvenile justice, behavioral health, autism, developmental disability, and reentry programs that strengthen communities by helping challenged youths and families lead healthy, safe, and productive lives. The organization uses a strength-based approach and seeks to foster the availability of community-based services abroad by advocating for, working with, and helping support sister agencies in Guatemala and Sierra Leone, an affiliate in Ireland, and the International Youth Advocacy Federation.

Zidisha, Inc.

Mrs. Julia Kurnia, Director
21900 Muirfield Circle, Suite 392
Sterling, VA 20164
TEL: (202) 492-6446
EMAIL: julia@zidisha.org
WEB: www.zidisha.org

Connects individual lenders directly with microfinance borrowers in low-income countries. Zidisha lowers the cost of microfinance loans by allowing entrepreneurs in developing countries to raise capital via a web platform that eliminates intermediaries and allows individual lenders and borrowers worldwide to interact directly. Zidisha's direct peer-to-peer lending model reduces the administrative cost of loans by automating and outsourcing to borrowers and lenders many of the record-keeping and credit-screening functions traditionally performed manually by local microfinance institutions. As a result, the average Zidisha borrower pays about 8 percent in annual interest and fees, including interest paid to lenders. The average interest rate for microfinance loans in developing countries is over 30 percent.

ZOE

Mr. Michael Hart, CEO

WEB: www.zoechildren.org

Cares for orphans, combats child trafficking, and shares God's love. ZOE works actively to rescue children from human trafficking and provides restorative care to both rescued children and children at high risk of being trafficked. Mobile teams provide community education presentations to prevent further occurrences of this atrocity. Zoe provides the following services to the children it serves: safe housing, meals, clothing, medical care, education, and spiritual care. These services are provided in a family setting. ZOE also provides humanitarian assistance and leadership training.

EMAIL: averias@zoosociety.org
WEB: www.zoosociety.org

Conserves wildlife and endangered species, educates people about the importance of wildlife and the environment, and supports the Milwaukee County Zoo. Through its Bonobo and Congo Biodiversity Initiative (BCBI), ZSM studies and ensures the survival of the bonobo—an endangered great ape—in the Salonga National Park in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The BCBI program builds the capacity of the national park through anti-poaching training and support; studies and surveys bonobo and other wildlife populations; and supports communities through primary school education and adult literacy classes.

Fights against hunger and defends the fundamental rights of populations in difficulty. Born in the context of the Afghan crisis and emergency response for Afghan refugees who fled to Pakistan in 1979, ACF, a humanitarian, voluntary, and professional nongovernmental organization, was created by a group of French intellectuals. ACF's mission is to intervene in the field to save lives and preserve and restore food security for populations. Working in conjunction with the people it serves, ACF provides the material and human resources necessary to address needs, relieve human suffering, and safeguard human dignity. ACF contributes to the protection of populations by taking action and testifying.

Fights poverty worldwide. Formed in 1972, ActionAid is an international development agency that last year helped more than 13 million of the world's poorest people in more than 40 countries. ActionAid is owned by national affiliates working with partners in Africa, Asia, the Americas, and Europe. In December 2003, the organization established a secretariat in Johannesburg, South Africa. ActionAid works with local partners, helping poor women and men gain their rights to food, education, human security, just and democratic governance, and health care. The organization's 350,000 supporters share its commitment, providing 70 percent of its income. ActionAid's partners range from small community groups to international networks, and its national and international campaigns highlight issues that affect poor people and influence the way that governments and international institutions work.

Provides professional assistance to rural farmers threatened by exclusion in southern countries. AVSF works to ensure that rural farming is economically viable, ecologically sustainable, and socially fair, as agriculture not only provides sustenance and livelihoods but also contributes to local democracy and to the vitality of rural areas. AVSF works through more than 80 programs in 18 countries, helping small farmers' associations protect production systems, improve productivity, manage resources, consolidate trade organizations, and bring products to local and international markets. Initiatives contribute to economic growth by providing employment in rural areas, increase health and food security, and facilitate sustainable management of natural resources. AVSF also advocates for greater justice in the international sphere and includes agriculturalists in its efforts to change policies and practices that breed poverty and injustice.

Provides relief and aid to refugees, internally displaced people, and survivors of conflicts, natural disasters, and other humanitarian crises in developing and transitioning countries. Since 1979, AAR Japan has provided emergency assistance to more than 55 countries in Africa, the Americas, the Middle East, and Southeast Asia. The organization develops and implements a broad range of programs in the areas of WASH (water, sanitation, and hygiene), HIV/AIDS, welfare, education, and vocational training and is dedicated to assisting the most vulnerable population groups—people with disabilities, the elderly, and at-risk children. AAR Japan also works in the field of mine action, providing mine-risk education, clearing mines, and assisting victims of landmines and cluster munitions. In addition, AAR Japan works to raise public awareness by proactively disseminating information on its activities through seminars, lectures, and events in Japan and abroad.

FAX: (1-416) 369-0294
EMAIL: info@cpar.ca
WEB: www.cpar.ca

Builds healthy and sustainable communities in Africa. For more than 25 years, CPAR has been targeting some of the most vulnerable rural areas of Ethiopia, Malawi, Tanzania, and northern Uganda with important interventions related to food security, water and sanitation, and access to primary health services. CPAR's work is guided by the underlying belief that everything is connected: specifically, that health is determined not only by the existence of health care services but also by social, economic, and environmental factors. Therefore, CPAR's work not only involves direct health interventions—ensuring a continuum of care between clinic and community—but also addresses the determinants of health, which include access to clean water, adequate food, and a safe and healthy environment. All CPAR projects are designed to be sustainable, ensuring that benefits continue to accrue long after CPAR's direct involvement.

Caritas Switzerland
CACH

Mr. Hugo Fasel, Director

Works for global solidarity. Established in 1985 as a secular, independent association, CESVI is guided by the principle of human solidarity and the ideal of social justice. These values underpin the organization's humanitarian and development work and affirm its commitment to universal human rights. CESVI's name is derived from the Italian "cooperazione e sviluppo" (cooperation and development), words that convey the organization's philosophy and reflect the leading role played by project beneficiaries. Main activities include the emergency supply of medical equipment and materials and the distribution of food and nonfood items. The organization rehabilitates public infrastructure—schools, hospitals, water wells, water distribution systems—and houses. CESVI's development activities include HIV/AIDS prevention, agricultural promotion, support for business, malaria and dengue fever prevention, hospital improvements, and food security.

Works to build lasting peace in partnership with people living and working in conflict or post-conflict situations. Violent conflict is a reality affecting millions of people across the globe. CORD believes these people hold the keys to peace, and the organization works alongside them to make lasting peace a reality. Conflict breaks up families and communities and disrupts and destroys lives, livelihoods, societies, and economies. CORD forms long-term partnerships that help build the ability of communities, organizations, and governments in Africa and Southeast Asia to direct their own development toward a peaceful future.

Supports projects that provide fortified foods to large populations—through market channels where feasible and through public-sector delivery systems when markets fail. GAIN is a Swiss foundation that mobilizes public-private partnerships and provides financial and technical support to deliver nutritious foods to people most at risk of malnutrition. The organization was created in 2002 at a Special Session of the U.N. General Assembly on Children. GAIN is delivering improved nutrition to an estimated 273 million people, half of whom are women and children, in more than 25 countries. GAIN's Business Alliance unites food producers and is a global focal point for private-sector strategies against undernutrition in Africa, Asia, and Latin America and the Caribbean. More nutritious food improves individual productivity and helps reduce poverty.

Contributes to poverty reduction through development projects and advisory services in more than 30 countries in Africa, Asia, Eastern Europe, and Latin America. HELVETAS Swiss Intercooperation, a politically and denominationally independent nonprofit association, came into existence in July 2011 with the merger of Helvetas (founded 1955) and Intercooperation (1982). Providing practical assistance, the organization builds communities' capacities to claim their rights, helping them preserve natural resources, develop environmentally sound rural economies, improve basic infrastructure, develop drinking water and sanitation schemes, and access education and skills development training. HELVETAS Swiss Intercooperation gives advice to communities, strengthens civil and state organizations, and promotes a balanced consideration of men and women.

Assists divided and conflicted societies to build lasting peace. Interpeace, an international peace-building organization based in Switzerland, was created as a U.N. pilot project, the War-torn Societies Project, in 1994. Interpeace became an independent nongovernmental organization (NGO) in 2000 and remains a close partner of the United Nations. The organization can implement Interpeace-style programming through the United Nations via the Joint Programme Unit for UN/Interpeace Initiatives or as an NGO. The organization's success is based on its belief in local ownership and local capacities. Interpeace works with carefully formed local teams that engage all sectors of a society to identify major challenges, develop consensus-driven solutions, and strengthen the capacity to manage conflict in nonviolent ways. Currently, Interpeace has programs in Africa, Central America, the Middle East, and Southeast Asia.

Facilitates access to health services and implements innovative approaches to improve maternal and neonatal health care in disadvantaged communities worldwide. Taking a global, inclusive approach, WAHA International focuses on training, capacity building, and treatment to attain its primary objective of sustainably improving women's health in the long term. Activities are defined in partnership with local universities, ministries of health, and health practitioners to address the barriers they face in providing quality care and to more effectively meet the needs of the populations served.

Addresses gender injustices on issues relating to the environmental, socioeconomic, and political rights of women and youth in society. WEP's thematic areas of operation encompass environment and governance and focus on human settlement, urbanization, climate change, disaster risk reduction, energy, water and sanitation, natural resources, women in democratic processes, and youth mentoring. WEP was founded in 1997 by a group of women working at the grassroots level and has strived to live up to its vision of partnering with all program stakeholders, including governments, international nongovernmental organizations, donors, and bilateral agencies. The organization holds special consultative status with the U.N. Economic and Social Council.

Women for Water Partnership

Bridges the gap between internationally accepted principles for sustainable development and practice in water management and water and sanitation services. WfWP supports women's social and economic development by meeting basic water and sanitation needs. The organization coordinates regional working conferences that foster capacity development; builds functional partnerships around women's initiatives; enables women to create tailor-made solutions to address their most pressing needs, ensuring that solutions are appropriate and sustainable; and gives them a voice to influence policy and participate in decision making at all levels. WfWP addresses empowerment in a holistic manner, supporting women's organizations to grow to their full potential by altering the mindset to accept women as partners instead of target groups for development. WfWP administers grant portfolios, including a unique, demand-driven small-grants system that provides seed funds for proposal development.

Builds the capacity of individuals, institutions, and governments throughout Africa, Asia, and the Americas. WUSC is a Canada-based nongovernmental organization (NGO) focused on improving human development through education, training, capacity building, and institution strengthening. With more than three decades of experience in international development, WUSC is recognized as one of Canada's leading NGOs in the design, implementation, and management of education, capacity-building, and development projects. WUSC is unique among Canadian development organizations because of its ability to link Canada's universities and colleges with overseas development and capacity-building activities. Reaching across Canada, WUSC's network includes more than 50 post-secondary institutions, 80 local committees (campus-based groups), and individual alumni to connect members and leaders to development initiatives.

REGISTRY

CDOs as part of the larger PVO community will be listed in the U.S. PVO Registry. In order to be listed in the Registry as a CDO, the CDO must comply with the annual documentation requirements in the Code of Federal Regulations, Title 22, Part 203. The following CDOs are included in the U.S. PVO Registry.

Descriptions of voluntary foreign aid activities were provided by USAID-registered organizations.

ACDI/VOCA

Mr. Carl Leonard, President and CEO
50 F Street NW, Suite 1000
Washington, DC 20001

Fosters broad-based economic growth, raises living standards, and creates vibrant communities. ACDI/VOCA's technical and management assistance enables organizations—whether enterprises, financial institutions, or cooperatives—to manage and finance themselves and succeed in the global economy. Areas of expertise include food security, agribusiness, enterprise development, financial services, and community development. Long known for its work in the areas of agricultural development and food security, ACDI/VOCA has gained prominence for value chain approaches to enterprise development and poverty reduction, establishment of sustainable financial institutions, and participatory community strengthening, especially in conflict-affected areas. ACDI/VOCA implements approximately 90 projects in 40 countries on behalf of public, private, and multilateral funders.

CHF International
d/b/a Global Communities

Stimulates long-lasting positive change in low- and moderate-income communities around the world, helping them to improve their social, economic, and environmental conditions. Using a participatory, demand-driven approach, Global Communities has worked in 115 countries since 1952, providing innovative development assistance that promotes local economic development and fosters grassroots community participation. Using businesslike approaches and democratic principles, Global Communities helps bolster the capacity of microenterprises, governments, cooperatives, and nongovernmental organizations to tackle social, environmental, and infrastructural issues on their own, while strengthening community participation and cohesion. Global Communities applies these principles effectively in many contexts, such as post-conflict emergency recovery and reconstruction, natural disaster response, mitigation of the HIV/AIDS pandemic, and focused assistance for low-income artisans.

ICMIF/Americas

Mr. Edward Potter, Executive Director
8400 Westpark Drive, 2nd Floor

WEB: www.ncba.coop

Provides technical assistance and training for the development of cooperatives, member-owned businesses, small enterprises, and microenterprises at the grassroots level, primarily in rural areas. Known overseas as the Cooperative League of the USA, the organization seeks to alleviate poverty through economic empowerment, democracy building, improved business skills, access to financing and information, and a cooperative approach to gain and protect market access for the rural poor. Recently, NCBA has applied its approach to community-managed health and sustainable natural resource use as well as to strengthening local organizations and local governments to support cooperative economic development.

National Rural Electric Cooperative Association
NRECA

Mr. Glenn English, Jr., CEO

EMAIL: norma.hiller@nreca.coop
WEB: www.nreca.org

Designs and implements efficient and financially sustainable rural electrification systems worldwide and promotes the consumer-owned electric utility model to ensure electric service is responsive to local needs. NRECA draws on conventional and nonconventional technologies, develops low-cost design adaptations, and uses renewable energy resources where appropriate. Other services NRECA provides include developing national rural electrification plans and training local electric utility employees in electric utility management, accounting, engineering, operations, and maintenance. NRECA maintains offices in 6 countries and currently has projects in 15 countries. Domestic NRECA member cooperatives generate, transmit, and distribute electricity to more than 42 million consumers in the United States.

Promotes the sustainable growth and expansion of quality credit unions for everyone worldwide. For over 40 years, World Council of Credit Unions has specialized in providing technical assistance and trade association services to members in more than 100 countries. World Council supports quality credit unions for everyone through its development projects, supporter programs, and international partnerships. World Council's proven Model Credit Union Building methodology provides steps to improve credit unions' efficiency and establish compliance with minimum financial standards that protect member savings. World Council works to create an appropriate regulatory environment for safe and sound credit union operation. As instruments of economic and social development, World Council and its member credit unions make a difference in the lives of more than 196 million people.
